PECULIAR FACT ABOUT DIVORCES

A divorce suit filed in the district court yesterday by Emma Bryant vs. Alfred Bryant, brings out the fact that under the laws of the state of Nevada it is not necessary to get a marriage license or to be before a minister or other officer to get married.

All you have to do is just to live together as man and wife and be so recognized in the neighborhood. This is what is called "common law marriage" and is something like the old Scottish law that where a man and a woman, in the presence of other people, joined hands and said "I take this woman (man) to be my lawful wedded wife (husband)," the marriage was just as lawful as any other ceremony, says the Elko Free Press.

But in this day and age it has become the style to go to a lot of fuss, to get a marriage license, and then to have your friends to come to your wedding, when you, after days of practice, stood up before a minister, a priest, a judge or a justice of the peace, and solemnly swear to "protect, obey until death do us separate."

And it is also the style to get a divorce after a short honeymoon and marriage experience—and so through the same performance with somebody else.

The divorce of Mrs. Bryant sets forth the fact that the man in the case came to Nevada, and then wrote to her urging that she come out to the land of sagebrush and wide distances, when he would procure a regular marriage license and marry her in the old fashioned way; that she came to Nevada on the 13th day of May, 1915, and that she entered into marriage relationship with Mr. Bryant, but no mention is made of any marriage; then again later on some four years, she insists on being married in the regular way, but in the meantime the man has become enamored of the woman's daughter, a fourteen-year-old girl by a former marriage and insists that if he marries anybody it will be the girl. To this the girl and mother objects and when the man gets impatient, they leave his home and board. This all happened at Montello, where the man was an employee of the Utah Construction company.

The woman meets another man and wants to get married, and being in doubt about the laws of the state, goes to Attorney Dymart, who informs her that she is the wife of Mr. Bryant under the common law, and that if she marries without obtaining a divorce, she will commit bigamy. She has lived with Bryant for four years as his wife, and as grounds for a divorce, claims that the action of Bryant toward her daughter caused her great mental anguish.

This law has been passed on by the supreme court in that a man and woman after living together as man and wife for years, mutually agree to separate, and years afterward the man married. He was arrested on the charge of bigamy, and the supreme court held that he was legally married in the eyes of the law, and he was sent to the state penitentiary.

AMUSEMENTS

IRENE CASTLE, THE FAMOUS DANCER, TONIGHT.

Irene Castle, internationally famous dancer and motion picture star, will be seen today at the Butler in an adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' popular novel, "The Firing Line."

Mrs. Castle spent seven months in British and American hospitals. During her stay in England she appeared before the king on one occasion and on another gave a performance at the welcome entertainment accorded General Joffre on his visit to London, after which she began work on the Paramount-Artcraft special picture, "The Firing Line," which first appeared in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post in the early part of 1917, and proved one of the most popular magazine stories at that time, and a year later was published in book form by D. Appleton & Co. The central character of the story is Sheila, the adopted daughter of a New York millionaire. She does not know this until she overhears a chance remark. There are many gripping scenes in the picture, all of which afford the star abundant opportunities for the display of her genius. She will be seen as a swimmer on the coast of Florida and she is the central figure of every dramatic situation in the picture. Added to the feature, a Ray Cartoon photograph. Tomorrow the popular film star, Tom Moore, in "Heartbreak," and a two-reel Mack Sennett comedy.

Monday, William Farnum, in Zane Grey's greatest novel, "The Last of the Dinosaurs."

MILL PLANNED FOR CANDELARIA

Equipment designed to handle a large tonnage of ore and waste is being installed on the properties of the Candelaria Mines company, owning three adjoining mines that were famous producers of silver many years ago, in addition to the Lucky Hill mine. The company's work has been devoted almost entirely to the development of the Lucky Hill, purchased as a raw prospect for the company by J. F. Coleman and associates of New York, who some time ago sold out to an association of New York and Canadian operators known as the International Nickel crowd. A substantial tonnage of high-grade ore has been developed in the Lucky Hill.

Charles D. Kaeding, general manager for the Candelaria Mines company, also vice president and manager of the Dome Mines company of Porcupine, Ont., has been at Candelaria recently. He reports satisfactory progress in development work and in providing new equipment. The new compressor at the Lucky Hill is capable of supplying 600 feet of ground monthly. Other equipment is designed for heavy duty and buildings now completed will house a large force of workmen.

Workings of the old mines are still accessible to a depth of 1400 feet and at a score or more of points stoping, can begin at once on ore that will yield a good profit, estimated visible reserves running into the hundreds of thousands of tons. The question of treatment processes is now claiming the attention of Mr. Kaeding and his associates and will be threshed out to a degree of finality insuring the recovery of the last possible pennyweight of metal at the lowest possible per ton cost. Three courses are open: shipment of the product to the smelter at Thompson, construction of a cyanide mill, or construction of a plant employing a volatilizing process that has been applied with success on a large scale in Arizona.

Favorable transportation and treatment rates are promised for ore sent to the Thompson smelter. The cyanide treatment involves subjecting the pulp to a high degree of heat. In the volatilizing process the ore is crushed, to about 20-mesh and roasted at a high temperature, the metals passing off in vapor, precipitating in dust chambers and being reduced to bullion by a process similar to smelting. Before roasting, the crushed ore is mixed with salt in the proportion of about 40 pounds salt to the ton of ore. Salt suitable for this purpose is available in unlimited quantity in dry lake beds near the mine. Exhaustive tests indicate that this process, while involving greater initial cost, will give an exceedingly high extraction—Nevada Mining Press.

ATTENTION, WORKERS! A joint session of all the organized crafts, miners and mill workers will be held in Paces' hall at 7 o'clock sharp tonight. Business of importance.

NO TRACE OF MISSING MINER

The only information received concerning Jos. E. Berger, the missing hoist engineer, was from Mrs. Ryder at whose home Berger stopped. After Berger met S. R. Ryan and informed him that he was feeling sick and was on his way to his room, Mrs. Ryder says she saw Berger across the street from the house apparently looking for something. She thought nothing about his actions and went to the movies. Next morning it was found that he had not occupied his room and did not leave town as his clothing and other belongings were as he left them the previous day. It is inferred from his actions that Berger was not in his right state of mind and must have wandered off into the hills, where he could not have survived the cold night. Berger was employed last on the Tonopah Belmont and drew his time when others walked out.
